Partido MEP ta felicita partidonan ganador na Curacao

Partido di Movimien- to Electoral di Pueblo a felicita tur e par- tidonan cu a sali ga- nador di e eleccion na Curacao diabierna ultimo. Segun MEP e pueblo a demostra cu nan kier keda cu nan gobierno, y cu nan a rechasa e bulamento di cura, den cual dos parlamentario a bai cu nan asiento, y a crea e crisis den goberna- cion. Pueblo a duna e partidonan e asien- tonan bek. Tambe ta obvio cu e pueblo di Curacao no a apre- cia e intervencion, cu ainda ta wordo hopi cuestiona, di Gober- nador na momento di a forsa un gobierno interino. Na Aruba tin hopi hende cu ta ex- presa nan desgusto cu e resultado aki, pero nos tur tin cu respeta e decision di e pue- blo di Curacao. Bo por ta di acuerdo cune of Di e eleccion aki, e par- tido cu a sorprende tur hende ta partido PAIS cu a crese di 2202 pa 15.395 voto, 4 asiento, algo cu nan mes no a spera. Analistanan na Cura- cao ta pensa cu es- nan cu a laga partido PAR mas tanto a vota pa partido PAIS, pa- sobra partido PAR a perde 4 asiento. Par- tido Pueblo Soberano tambe a bai dilanti di 13.886 pa 19.716 voto, hasiendo e par- tido aki pa prome bi- aha den historia e partido mas grandi na Curacao, y e lider, sr. Helmin Wiels e lider mas grandi di e pais. Remarcable ta cu tanto partido MFK di sr. Gerrit Schotte, y partido MAN, di sr.

MFK a bai di- lanti cu 2.488 voto, y MAN a bai dilanti cu 1.766 voto. Sin duda algun, e partidonan cu tawata forma go- bierno prome cu elec- cion, a sali e gran ga- nadornan di e eleccion aki. Por a nota pres- encia di hopi miem- bro di prensa di Aruba na Curacao pa cubri e eleccion, y tambe presencia di minister- nan di Aruba pa duna sosten na e partido di nan preferencia cu ta PAR, di sra. Emily de Jong Elhage. Lamen- tablemente e partido aki a bai atras di 8 asiento, pa 4 asiento. Ta di lamenta si cu ministernan di pais

Yankees GM: A-Rod not out of reach

NEW YORK -- New York Yankees general manager Brian Cashman called a trade of Alex Rodriguez "unrealistic," but said he would listen to offers for his third baseman -- a player he conceded is no longer a superstar -- if teams called to inquire about him.

Appearing on "Sunday Morning with Ian O'Connor" on ESPNNewYork 98.7 FM, Cashman said CC Sabathia's left elbow might require a surgical "clean-up" in the coming weeks, and he called hitting coach Kevin Long "safe" in wake of the lineup's collapse during Detroit's sweep of the American League Championship Series.

Cashman also ruled out the possibility of backup shortstop Eduardo Nunez being moved to another position, and he maintained that the team needs "to be very careful about what we do on multiyear deals as we approach 2014," which could be bad news for Robinson Cano and other Yankees looking to strike it rich despite Hal Steinbrenner's mandate to reduce payroll to $189 million in two years.

But the most pressing offseason issue revolves around Rodriguez, who was so dreadful against right-handers in the play-offs that manager Joe Girardi pinch-hit for him and benched him and inspired talk that A-Rod could be dealt this offseason.

"It's not like I'm going to hang phones up on anybody who wants to make any overtures about anything," Cashman told O'Connor. "You're talking about realistic stuff and unrealistic stuff. I don't think it's realistic at all for us to be moving forward with anything but Alex Rodriguez at third base."

"He's still an above-average third baseman. ... That means despite the contract that we had committed to him, that he's an asset at this stage still. I don't see us doing anything there. I don't anticipate it. If someone wants to make phone calls, we're more than willing to do all that stuff with any of our players, and that's fine. You can run into something that way.

"But listen, the sooner we put to bed any expectation or anticipation that the Yankees are going to be solely focused on trying to move Alex Rodriguez. ... I think that would be false. And it would be just a lot of wasted energy on anybody's part to be thinking."

While Cashman left open the possibility that something just as unexpected as his 2004 acquisition of A-Rod could unfold this offseason -- sending A-Rod to another team -- the GM said there is "no doubt" he expects the 37-year-old Rodriguez to be his starting third baseman in 2013.

But Cashman agreed A-

Rod's days as a superstar are finished, something A-Rod himself has refused to concede.

"Do I expect him to return to the MVP-caliber type Alex Rodriguez? No," Cashman said. "Obviously you decline with age, and he's getting up there in his age. ... So no, that would be very unrealistic to think as well. But despite the age where he's at, he's still an above-average player at that position."

"Is he a superstar at that position? No. But I think when anybody signed that (10-year, $275 million) contract (in 2007), expecting him to be at that level at that age would be unrealistic also."

Cards, Giants need more than character, resiliency to win Game 7 of NLCS

SAN FRANCISCO -- We've heard a lot of talk talk in this postseason about resiliency, about character, about that good old-fashioned never-give-up attitude that keeps a team alive when it has all but flat-lined in a game or a series. And we'll hear more of it up until, and even after, we get a winner in Monday night's Game 7 of the National League Championship Series (8:07 p.m. ET, ESPN Radio and ESPNRadio.com).

And, probably, there's something to it. How do you dismiss the recent playoff history of the Cardinals, left for dead in Washington in Game 5 of the division series two weeks ago but still playing on, left for dead (several times) in St. Louis in Game 6 of the World Series last October but re-energized to survive and reach a Game 7 and win a world championship? How in good conscience do you overlook the recent playoff history of the Giants, who've now won five straight games in which a loss would have eliminated them from the postseason, including Sunday night's 6-1 victory over St. Louis in Game 6 of the NLCS?

Nice work from both clubs, to be sure, to show the backbone to get to this point against some formidable odds. But the thing is, making guesses about Game 7 based on mettle, or spunk, or tenacity, or character is an impossible riddle, a waste of good breath in this case, if for no other reason than in a matchup of these two teams, it's a wash. They've both shown enough intestinal fortitude to make believers out of anybody. (And speaking of a wash, keep an eye on the San Francisco weather on Monday. Late Sunday, the forecast called for lots of wet stuff -- an 80 percent chance of rain.) So ... one very pithy comment from one of the principals about the way the Cardinals and the Giants are both 11th-hour teams in this 11th-hour game, and we'll move on. "That's just what we do," said Adam Wainwright, who started and won Game 4 for St. Louis and will be available out of the bullpen if necessary in Game 7. "We were just saying that in [the clubhouse] a minute ago. For whatever reason, we always make it harder than it needs to be. And if you look back on it and ask, 'Why did we make it as hard as we did?' it's OK, as long as you win. It's a fun argument to have ... if you win. It's great TV. TV's got to love this. Fans in St. Louis probably have no fingernails left.

"And in San Francisco, too. I saw a sign behind the dugout [Sunday]. It was a Giants' fan. It said, 'Who likes being tortured more than us? Nobody.' And I'd say St. Louis fans could argue that." So now with character accounted for, the outcome of Game 7 is more likely to be determined by other factors, by baseball factors. Character won't matter so much when, say, Carlos Beltran steps into the batter's box against Matt Cain, who gets his second NLCS start for San Francisco on Monday. Character won't necessarily be the difference when, say, Cardinals Game 7 starter Kyle Lohse tries to put a 3-2 pitch in a place where Hunter Pence's swing isn't.

But while it won't be a matter of character that determines, say, whether Matt Holliday is in the St. Louis lineup, it will be a matter of backbone. Literally. Holliday was scratched from Game 6 at the last minute because of tightness in his lower back, and the status on Monday is uncertain for the Cardinals left fielder and 3-hole hitter who accounted for 27 home runs and 102 RBIs during the regular season. St. Louis can use his offense; playing short-handed on Sunday, it managed just five hits and one late, meaningless run. Through six games, the Cardinals have a team batting average of .219.

Lance Armstrong verdict upheld

GENEVA -- Forget the seven Tour de France victories. Forget the yellow jersey celebrations on the Champs Elysees. Forget the name that dominated the sport of cycling for so many years. As far as cycling's governing body is concerned, Lance Armstrong is out of the record books. Once considered the greatest rider in Tour history, the American was cast out Monday by his sport, formally stripped of his seven titles and banned for life for his involvement in what U.S. sports authorities describe as a massive doping program that tainted all of his greatest triumphs.

"Lance Armstrong has no place in cycling, and he deserves to be forgotten in cycling," said Pat McQuaid, president of the International Cycling Union. "This is a landmark day for cycling."

McQuaid announced that his group, known as UCI, accepted sanctions imposed by the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency and would not appeal them to the Court of Arbitration for Sport. McQuaid said he was "sickened" by some of the evidence detailed by USADA in its 200-page report and hundreds of pages of supporting testimony and documents. The condemnation by cycling's most senior official confirmed Armstrong's pariah status, after the UCI had backed Armstrong at times in trying to seize the doping investigation from USADA. McQuaid said the UCI endorsed a lifelong ban for Armstrong after almost two weeks studying the American agency's evidence, and will meet Friday to discuss going after his 2000 Olympic bronze medal.

Tour de France director Christian Prudhomme said he no longer considers Armstrong to be a champion from 1999 to 2005 and wants him to pay back his prize money. "We wish that there is no winner for this period," he said in Paris. "For us, very clearly, the titles should remain blank. Effectively, we wish for these years to remain without winners."

Armstrong's representatives had no immediate comment, but the rider was defiant in August as he chose not to fight USADA in one of the agency's arbitration hearings. He argued the process was rigged against him.

"I know who won those seven Tours, my teammates know who won those seven Tours, and everyone I competed against knows who won those seven Tours," Armstrong said then. "The toughest event in the world where the strongest man wins. Nobody can ever change that."

USADA said Armstrong should be banned and stripped of his Tour titles for "the most sophisticated, professionalized and successful doping program that sport has ever seen" within his U.S. Postal Service and Discovery Channel teams. He will lose all his race results since August 1998. The agency welcomed the decision by UCI after months of sparring between the two organizations. "Today, the UCI made the right decision in the Lance Armstrong case," USADA CEO Travis Tygart said in a statement, which called on cycling to continue to fight doping. "There are many more details of doping that are hidden, many more doping doctors, and corrupt team directors and the omerta has not yet been fully broken."

The USADA report said Armstrong and his teams used steroids, the blood booster EPO and blood transfusions. The report included statements from 11 former teammates who testified against Armstrong, including that he pressured them to take banned just mind-boggling."

Armstrong denies doping, saying he passed hundreds of drug tests -- he has claimed as many as 500. UCI conducted 218 tests, and there were 51 more by USADA, although they are not the only drug-testing bodies. USADA's report, released earlier this month, was aimed at showing why the agency ordered the sanctions against him.

"At the moment Lance Armstrong hasn't admitted to anything, yet all the evidence is there in this report that he doped," McQuaid said. On Sunday, Armstrong greeted about 4,300 cyclists at his Livestrong charity's fundraiser bike ride in Texas, telling the crowd he's faced a "very difficult" few weeks.

"I've been better, but I've also been worse," Armstrong, a cancer survivor, told the crowd.

While drug use allegations have followed Armstrong, 41, throughout much of his career, the USADA report has badly damaged his reputation. Longtime sponsors Nike, Trek bicycles and Anheuser-Busch dropped him last week, and Armstrong also stepped down last week as chairman of Livestrong, the cancer-awareness charity he founded 15 years ago after surviving testicular cancer, which spread to his lungs and brain.

After the UCI decision Monday, another longtime Armstrong sponsor, Oakley sunglasses, cut ties with the rider.

"I was sickened by what I read in the USADA report," McQuaid said, singling out the testimony of former teammate David Zabriskie. "The story he told of how he was coerced and to some extent forced into doping is produktonan aki tin regla. b. Kon ta bai informá e pueblo aki, i tur ku tin di hasi ku e produkto aki pa nan mes seguridad? Mi ta spera ku Gobièrnu ta tuma bon nota di e puntonan ariba menshoná na benefisio di salu di e pueblo. Pa e motibunan ariba menshoná, mi no ta usa spaarlamp, pero ledlamp ku tin un durashon di 30 aña.
